

SEMI-WEEKLY SOUTH KENTUCKIAN

FRIDAY, APRIL 1, 1887.
CHAS. M. MEACHAM, Editor.

The New York Sun now publishes a bright, new edition at only one cent per copy.

Mrs. Logan states that inasmuch as she now has a sufficient income to maintain her, she wants no government pension.

The Louisville Times announces that it knows a man who has $5,000 deposited in bank to bet that Gen. Buckner, if he lives, will be the next Governor of Kentucky.

Carter Harrison, after dilly-dallying for several days, has finally declined to be the Democratic nominee for Mayor of Chicago another term and no one has yet been found to take his place on the ticket.

Thos. C. Reynolds committed suicide Thursday by plunging down the elevator shaft of the St. Louis Custom-House. He was 65 years of age and was Lieutenant Governor of Missouri in 1860 and fought a duel with H. Gratz Brown in 1851.

The new Sunday law of Missouri closes saloons and beer gardens, stops the running of street railroads, the publication of newspapers, all manual labor and all kinds of traffic on the Sabbath. It is the most rigid Sunday law ever passed by any of the States.

The great ocean yacht race was won by the Corocut, which passed the winning point at 12:50 p. m. Sunday, the actual time of the voyage from New York to Cork being 14 days, 19 hours and 3 minutes. The Danless was only a few hours behind at the end of the run.

Gov. Knott has entered in the National Drill at Washington one regiment, one battalion, two infantry companies, one platoon of light artillery, one of mounted guns and a rifle team of Kentucky troops. Evidently there is some fun ahead for the military boys.

Eleven negroes were poisoned by a Voodoo doctor named Bonner, at Macon, Ga., this week. They were poisoned because they doubted the "doctor's" powers, whereupon he prophesied that the entire family would die within a month. Six of them had died up to yesterday and the survivors cannot live much longer. Bonner has made his escape.

A Wichita, Kansas, paper "calls a halt" to the wild speculation in that city, and predicts a financial crash if the plan of making additions to the town is not stopped. The speculators are adding the prairie for miles around to the city, and embracing enough land to build a city of one million inhabitants. Lots are being sold five miles from the city.

The enemies of Gen. Buckner are kicking because he owns half a million of property in Chicago and only $12,000 worth in Kentucky. This is an absurd nonsense. It is nobody's business what kind of property Gen. Buckner invests his surplus capital in or where his investments are made. The fact that he has the business capacity to look after a fortune of that magnitude is one of the strongest reasons why he should be selected to administer the affairs of Kentucky.

The wife of Jacob Bread, of Newark, Ohio, made it hot for her husband last week by throwing a pan of scalding water into his face. Mr. Bread was cooked by the operation, in fact he was so thoroughly cooked that he died a few hours later from the burns received. It does not seem to have been a well bread fellow, as he was engaged in the pleasant pastime of caressing his wife with his fists when she defended herself with the above result. Mrs. Bread has not been arrested.

The Louisville Times is flattering itself that Louisville is to prosper from the misfortunes of other cities, under the workings of the Interstate Commerce Law. It takes this cheerful view of the situation:

"In the debate upon the free-State Commerce bill in Congress the chief assault of the long and short-line sections, it was contended that if that clause were left in the bill, freight rates from the Mississippi to the Atlantic seaboard would be advanced to the local rates between those sections, and that the inevitable result would be to add to the cost of moving crops from west to east and converting merchandise from east to west. If the assumption should be verified, it can only result in such a reversal of the present conditions of the Mississippi and Ohio that it will ruin the local business, and such a reversal will build up St. Louis, Louisville and New Orleans, which cities will gain the grain business now centered at Chicago. If the through rates, as at present established by the railroads, are not disturbed, the effect will be to destroy the tobacco market of Clarksville, Hopkinsville, Henderson, Owensboro and other points, and concentrate the business at Louisville. So it will be observed Louisville will be benefited anyhow. Now let the boon proceed."

There is a large amount of log-stealing now going on along the Kentucky river in Clay, Leslie, Perry and other river counties. The logs are floated down to the mouths of the creeks to accumulate, for rafts. The thieves cut out the owners' marks, float them away and sell them. As quite a large portion of the logs are black walnut, which are worth back $10 to $15, the loss to owners of such is often great. Mr. G. M. Asher, of Clay county, who has suffered severely from log thieves, has had several of the thieves indicted, and now all the thieves have combined and threaten him with deathly lynching if he doesn't sell out and leave the country within sixty days. The penalty for log-stealing is impracticable. As Asher is a plucky man and his friends say they will stick to him, a pretty lively local war seems imminent. —Newport Journal.

Louisville Tobacco Market.

[By Glover & Barrett.]

The sales on our market for the week just closed amounted to 1748 hbls. with receipts for the same period of 1438 hbls. Sales on our market since January 1st, amount to 31,968 hbls. owing to the continued dry weather receipts and sales have been comparatively light for the past week; and the inevitable result would be to add to the cost of moving crops from west to east and converting merchandise from east to west. If the assumption should be verified, it can only result in such a reversal of the present conditions of the Mississippi and Ohio that it will ruin the local business, and such a reversal will build up St. Louis, Louisville and New Orleans, which cities will gain the grain business now centered at Chicago. If the through rates, as at present established by the railroads, are not disturbed, the effect will be to destroy the tobacco market of Clarksville, Hopkinsville, Henderson, Owensboro and other points, and concentrate the business at Louisville. William Makes a Slight Mistake.

[Somerset Times.]

"O, you good-for-nothing wretch!" exclaimed Big William's wife, as she reached her hand out of bed and felt in the cradle to see if the baby was covered up. "Whash'er matter?" murmured Big William, as he turned in his sleep. "Matter enough? Ough, you! Wake up and go down stairs and bring baby up here this minute. I'll bring him up. He's in the cradle!"

"No such a thing. You've drank too much hard cider. You wrapped the Christmas turkey in baby's blanket and rocked to sleep in the cradle, you wretch, and baby's down stairs on the sofa catching cold."

WAR PANORAMAS.

Description of the Progress and Progress of Little Picture Painting.

The central platform is, of course, the standpoint from which visitors will view the panorama—and therefore the artists are obliged to go to it frequently as the painting nears completion, in order to observe the effect and progress of their work. This, too, is the place of conference, and despite the signs of "No Admittance" within and without, visitors are frequent and usually welcome. These visitors are often veteran soldiers who took part in the action represented and who often make helpful suggestions. The army stories that are told on the central platform, when old soldiers meet and discuss the old days, would, if collected, make a religious volume. The floor of the platform is chalked and red chalked with diagrams to some referring to the panorama itself, but more to illustrate occurrences upon other fields. The strong pull surrounding the platform is reached all over with kindred decorations, while scraps of paper, which are memoranda of incidents and a variety of data, as well as names and addresses, are pinned to the convenient lumber with thumb tacks. The artists paint steadily, every individual being mainly occupied in perfecting his own work, though never hesitating to ask or extend aid in some special direction. One artist, for instance, has an excellent figure of a mounted officer, all complete excepting the portrait, a photograph for which is pinned to the canvas. With this artist goes to strengthen a line of battle, another one will rapidly paint in an admirable portrait for the incomplete figure. Soon another horse is busy with the horse, while still another artist calls for some special saddle and bridle to be brought to the platform that he may paint the trappings. Now, look at the back of the photograph which is pinned to the canvas—faded onto the white of a young officer; upon a slip of paper we read the following: "Colonel K., now on General Sheridan's staff; then Captain General Grant's staff. He is a big fellow, 6 feet 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100. This instance will give an idea of the way in which facts are preserved when a panorama is painted by artists who conscientiously strive to make of the work a great historical painting. —St. Nicholas.

General Grant's Horses.

"General Grant's Horses," says Harrison, his servant, "was undoubtedly caused by the Grant & Ward failure. Ward treated him badly during the whole connection, and I remember that after Grant hurt his hip he lent Ward one of his horses. Ward sold it for $2,000, and Grant never got a cent of the money. General Grant kept six horses in New York up to the time of the failure. He had two fine teams for Mrs. Grant and good good riders for himself. He liked to drive alone, and nothing pleased him better than to pass every thing on the road. He was very proud of the Arabian steed which the Sultan gave him, and which he rode on the farm of General Heile, and the other is somewhere in the country. They are both, I think, still in the hands of the Grant family." —Carpenter in Cleveland Leader.

A gold nugget, weighing thirty-five pounds and valued at six thousand dollars, is on exhibition in San Francisco, Cal. It was found in the northern part of the State, and is the largest and finest ever unearthed. —San Francisco Chronicle.
